Amandus Adamson was one of the most famous Estonian sculptors of his time. After years of study in St. Petersburg, he first began to work there as a freelance artist. After a period of study in Paris and Italy from 1887 to 1891, the influences of the works of Jules Dalou and Jean-Baptiste Carpeaux can be clearly seen in his creations. In addition to large sculptures and monuments, he also created smaller works, such as the sculpture "The Last Sigh of the Ship" from 1899, a design very similar to the one presented here. Versions of various of his models in bisque porcelain can be found in the collection of the Hermitage in St. Petersburg.

Estimate: 5.500 € - 7.500 €; Hammer: 9.500 €
