"A great deal of Marclay's output, possibly the majority of it, is visual or plastic in nature. And yet even this is as much about sound recording; perhaps more so, because it concerns the ubiquity of sound in culture. Marclay's work is about the socially inscribed 'flip side' of sound; it is about the very fact that I could use the phrase 'flip side' as unthinkingly as I just did, realizing only as I typed it that the term derives from records, and is thus infinitely apropos for use there."
Philip Sherburne, Parkett no. 70, 2004.
