"The couple bought a camper van in the late 1970s and succumbed to a migratory pull. For years, they had no fixed address and, save for a radio, never owned any transmission devices. They would write letters or call from pay phones to keep in touch. These decisions were necessary for the art, which required lengthy periods of absolute concentration on participants predisposed to moving about."

Matthew S. Witkovsky, Parkett no. 100/101, 2017.
