With Parkett magazine.

"He owns concretely. He owns the stuff of his (and our culture's) dreams - houses, rare books, and cars - and he turns that stuff into art by hijacking their images. He acquired all that he has by taking aesthetic possession. His work, by employing a canny approach to the mediated image, takes abstract ownership of a type of imagery that deals with desire and consumption."
Dike Blair, Parkett no. 72, 2004.
