The dating of this oil study of the galloping grey horse shows it to be a work from 1837. In that year, the young artist was still living in Düsseldorf and working at the academy there. The following year he travelled to St Petersburg in Russia, the prelude to his first successful years in Russia. In addition to commissioned portraits, he established himself as a military painter; in 1838, in Russia, he transferred the study of a grey horse shown here to the watercolour with the battle scene offered under lot 1275.
